Network Security and Privacy Breach

With the increase volume of stored data, breaches of privacy and identity thefts, consideration must be given to how you protect your information. Privacy and Cyber Liability insurance protection will not be found on your general liability, professional liability and umbrella policies.

Most businesses perform at least some of their work online, which makes networks and computers susceptible to security breaches. In addition, if you store private information (including but not limited to credit card information, names, social security numbers, and driver's license numbers) on your business computers, in paper files or personal portable devices you have this exposure. Your organization is at risk for lawsuits, regulatory investigations and fines. Not to mention the additional costs that can be incurred as a result of mandatory notification requirements once a data breach occurs.

Privacy & Security Liability Insurance typically covers the costs associated with loss of client and employee information:

- IT forensic services (costs to pay an expert to figure out how your data was compromised)
- Notification and reporting expenses (costs of sending letters to those who have had their information compromised)
- Credit monitoring (costs to pay a credit monitoring bureau to monitor someone's credit after breach)
- Defense costs, fines and penalties (State, HIPAA, HiTECH, FTC and Graham-Leach-Bliley fines and other fines)

Privacy & Security Liability Insurance is an essential coverage for private, public, and non-profit organizations. To educate you more about this coverage or to speak with one of our business associates, please contact us directly. There is no new application to complete to obtain a presentation! Just send us annual revenues, your type of business operation and website. You may complete the form below and return it to us. Thank you.
